After the sudden and huge success from the world-famous soap "The Little Red Riding Hood", everybody had heard of one of its main characters, wolf, interpreted by the actor Big Bad Wolf. Due to the avalanche of media about him, he was put on center stage, described as "the first wolf that people really appreciates". His career had seemed to start on good bases, until yesterday afternoon.

Indeed the actor was found lifeless in the Sherwood Forest at around 4p.m by a hunting band. The whole camera crew is still in shock and more particularly Lil' Red, his screen partner in the role of the Little Red Riding Hood, who told to the press: "His death is the worth thing that's happened in my life. We were friends for so many years. I still can't believe it." According to the first police investigation, the actor was reported to have committed suicide. A farewell letter addressed to Lil'

Red and her grand-mother was found at his apartment. He apparently wrote that the pressure which he suffered was too much: "I feel like the weight of the world is on my shoulders. I'm on the verge of a breakdown". Wolf felt rejected by the wildlife and worse, by his wolf pack: "It's like I was an outsider. In their eyes, I no longer exist".

In the opinion of his friends, the case of a suicide is impossible: "Wolf was the best friend I knew. I am certain and convinced that he never thought to end his life", said Lil' Red. Moreover, some evidences still need to be examined, leaving a way to doubt, such as a recent physical altercation and strange phone calls.

To face this tragic event and to pay tribute to the memory of Wolf, Lil' Red, her grand-mother and the camera crew of "The Little Red Riding Hood" decided to temporarily stop the Soap at a global scale, "until the veil was lifted on this case".
